FAR NORTH LOCATION USED TO FILM ADVENTURE STORY

(Advance)

Geography became drama when producer Lindsley Parsons flew a film company of actors and technicians out of Hollywood to make "Arctic Flight," latest Wayne Morris starring picture for Monogram. This was because their destination was Kotzebue, Alaska, and Little Diomede Island, a spot in the Bering Strait, less than three miles from the easternmost shore line of forbidding Soviet territory.

"Arctic Flight," filmed under circumstances of danger, privation and hardship, will be the next attraction at the ..... theatre.

"Arctic Flight" is from an original story by Ewing Scott, an expert on the far north, who also directed the picture until an injury on the ice of Little Diomede sent him by plane to the hospital in Nome, where he was several weeks recovering. After that Lew Landers took over direction of the scenes.

Featured in the film is Lola Albright, who proved herself to be a real-life heroine under the difficulties of such an unusual location. Also making the trip was Alan Hale, Jr., husky enough to survive under any circumstances, but who had to bow to Lola when the going got really rough.

Also appearing in the featured cast is Carol Thurston, who plays the part of a modern Eskimo girl, and Tom Richards, an Eskimo, who in real life is a bush pilot, a resident of Kotzbue. He was signed for a part in the picture after the company reached the Alaskan location.

ARCTIC PILOT

"ARCTIC FLIGHT" No. 4

Wayne Morris is starred in "Arctic Flight," Monogram's tense drama of intrigue on the borderland of two continents, starting ..... at the ..... theatre.

Arctic Expert Penned Story

"Arctic Flight," new adventure film now at the ..... theatre, and which stars Wayne Morris with Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr., is from an original story by Ewing Scott, an expert on the far north, and a man who has spent years filming arctic adventure stories.

Much of the picture was made near the settlement of Kotzebue, on the Bering Strait, where the film company headquartered during production.

Morris plays the pilot-owner of an arctic air line. He is chartered to take on a hunting trip, by air, a man, portrayed by Hale. His is a role that carries an unusual twist. Miss Albright is a mission school teacher, and the drama in which they become involved makes for the tautest form of melodrama.

Lindsley Parsons produced the picture for Monogram and the direction was by Lew Landers, with Scott as associate producer.

ARCTIC AFFAIR

"ARCTIC FLIGHT" No. 1

..Actually filmed in the icy reaches of Alaska's northernmost wilderness, Monogram's "Arctic Flight," starring Wayne Morris and featuring beautiful Lola Albright, is the current screen magnet at the ..... theatre.

Camera Moved By Dog Team

Cameras and other motion picture equipment used during production of "Arctic Flight," now playing at the ..... theatre, was transported not by motor trucks, as is the usual practice, but by sled and dog team over arctic wastes. This is because most of the Lindsley Parsons production for Monogram was filmed far north of the Arctic Circle, on Little Diomede Island in the Bering Strait and near Kotzebue, Alaska, where the company was headquartered.

Wayne Morris is starred in the production, which was directed by Lew Landers from an original story by Ewing Scott, who served as associate producer. Featured in the supporting cast are Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr. Other players are Carol Thurston, Phil Tead, Kenneth MacDonald and Tom Richards, an Eskimo bush pilot and a native of Kotzebue.

FEATURED

Lola Albright is featured in Monogram's "Arctic Flight," now playing at the ..... theatre. Much of the picture was made north of the Arctic Circle. The Lindsley Parsons production stars Wayne Morris.

Parkas Needed As Daily Wear

When Wayne Morris, Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr., made Monogram's "Arctic Flight," fur parkas, heavy mittens and snow boots were more than costumes just to be worn in front of the cameras.

The heavy garments were daily and nightly wear, for most of the picture was made on location in the far north, on Little Diomede Island, in the Bering Strait, and at Kotzebue, Alaska.

In "Arctic Flight," now playing at the ..... theatre, Morris' role is that of an Alaskan bush pilot, hired by a big game hunter to go on a flight after polar bear. The hunter, played by Hale, proves to be more than just a sportsman who is flown across the Arctic wastes in search of a bear. From that springboard, the story takes off on many swift-moving dramatic twists and turns.

The original was written by Ewing Scott, an expert on the far north, who directed the picture until he received an injury on the ice of Little Diomede, and who had to be flown to a Nome hospital. Lew Landers completed direction for producer Lindsley Parsons.

COMMUTES

Lola Albright, native New Yorker, makes her home there and commutes between that city and Hollywood for picture work. Currently she has the feminine lead in "Arctic Flight," a Wayne Morris starrer for Monogram, now playing at the ..... theatre. The cast also includes Alan Hale, Jr. The film was produced by Lindsley Parsons.

AIRPLANE USED

Hunting polar bear from a low-flying airplane is one of the thrill sequences of Monogram's "Arctic Flight," new adventure drama now playing at the ..... theatre. The flight is an actual one, with Alan Hale, Jr., as the hunter and Wayne Morris the pilot of the plane.

BEAUTY AND BUSH PILOT BRAVE ARCTIC

"ARCTIC FLIGHT" No. 21

SCREEN DRAMA FILMED UNDER SCRUTINY OF SOVIET EYES

Much of the time that Wayne Morris' latest starring picture, "Arctic Flight," was being filmed far north of the Arctic Circle, the players and the technicians were under scrutiny of Soviet border guards, watching through high-powered glasses, and from light planes operating from Russian advance bases, only a few miles away.

This was because of the unique location where most of the Monogram picture, now playing at the ..... theatre, was made, The location site was Little Diomede Island, in the Bering Strait, approximately three miles from eastermost Russia territory.

During its stay in the actic country, the film troupe of players, technicians, and plane pilots was based at Kotzebue, Alaska, outpost in the far north. Living conditions were on the ruggedly primitive side, and the only woman with the company, Lola Albright, featured in the film, had to adopt what was almost a native Eskimo type of living.

Included in the cast with Morris and Miss Albright are Alan Hale, Jr., Carol Thurston, Kenneth MacDonald and Tom Richards, a very modern young Eskimo who, without previous acting experience, was signed for his role when the company first reached Kotzebue.

The Lindsley Parsons production is from an original story by Ewing Scott, an expert in far north affairs, who directed the picture until he was injured on the ice of Little Diomede and had to be sent to a Nome hospital by plane. Lew Landers took over the direction.

Filming Halted For Rescue Lift

Production of Monogram's "Arctic Flight," Wayne Morris adventure picture now at the ..... theatre, was halted for ten days when the company was on location at Little Diomede Island, near Alaska, while planes used by the company were commandeered to join the search for a seal hunter, lost in the Bering Strait. Eventually he was found alive.

During the making of the picture, in which Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr., are featured, the players and the technicians made their headquarters at Kotzebue, Alaska, the northernmost outpost of modern plumbing in United States territory.

Morris plays a bush pilot, hired to take a pseudo big game hunter on a trip after polar bear.

Miss Albright portrays a government nurse-teacher just assigned to a position in the Arctic country.

The picture was produced by Lindsley Parsons and was directed in part by Ewing Scott, expert on the arctic, and Lew Landers, who took over when Scott was badly injured in a fall on Little Diomede.

THE STORY

(Not for Publication)

Mike Maley, Alaskan bush pilot operating out of Kotzebue, near the Arctic Circle close to the Diomedes, unexpectedly gets a government passenger. She is Martha Raymond assigned as school teacher-nurse on Little Diomede two and a half miles from Big Diomede in Russia. Mike's next passenger whom he picks up in Nome, is Harold Wetherby, an apparently wealthy business man from the states, who wants to get a polar bear. Wetherby gets acquainted with Dave Karluk, Eskimo reindeer herder, his native girl friend, Saranna Koonuk, Squid Tucker, Mike's helper, and others in Kotzebue and they all like him. The weather finally clears and Mike and Wetherby take off. They make their polar bear kill but while they are skinning the animal Wetherby's wallet falls out of his pocket, and Mike sees a card giving Wetherby entry into Russian territory two days hence. Wetherby, knowing he has been discovered as an agent for Russia, attempts to stab Mike by pretending a fall, but only succeeds in wounding Mike in the arm. Mike forces Wetherby into the plane and takes him back to Kotzebue, where it is discovered Wetherby is carrying concealed microfilms disclosing high United States military secrets. Wetherby manages to escape, running wildly across the ice toward Big Diomede. Before he can get near enough to the Russian sentries to show his sentry papers he is shot and killed by Russian bullets. Mike now may devote his time to Martha.

NEW WAYNE MORRIS DRAMA IS PACKED WITH ACTION

(Review)

"Arctic Flight," newest action release starring Wayne Morris, is an unusually thrilling picture in many ways. The background against which it was filmed is absolutely unique, the story is dramatically original, and the casting and direction are a job of perfection for Lindsley Parsons, who has long been a top producer of Monogram product. The picture opened yesterday at the ..... theatre, where audience response was more than enthusiastic.

The setting of "Arctic Flight," which features Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr., is in the far north, at Kotzebue, and on Little Diomede Island, out in the bleak and icy sweeps of the Bering Strait. This region borders the Communistic mystery land of Soviet Russia. The picture, in main part, actually was filmed in the desolate and forbidding territory, players and technicians undergoing real hardship in order to bring the exciting story to the screen.

Morris plays the part of an Alaskan bush pilot, lone-wolfing it in the field of arctic air transportation. He gets an unexpected passenger in Miss Albright, en route to Little Diomede, where she is to take over the native school. Next Morris is chartered to pick up Hale, posing as a big game hunter, in Nome. Hale, also, wants to get to the Diomedes to shoot polar bear, but it develops that he is in that country for more than bear hunting. His character undergoes a surprise change, and from the moment it does, the picture moves excitingly to a high climax.

The original story was written by Ewing Scott, a man who for some years has made the far north his territory of operation in making films. Scott himself directed a great part of the picture until an injury on the ice hospitalized him, and the directional job had to be taken over by Lew Landers.

IN "ARCTIC FLIGHT"

Dramatic actor Alan Hale, Jr. plays an important role in "Arctic Flight," Monogram adventure starting ..... at the ..... theatre. Wayne Morris is starred.

Eskimo Pilot Gets Film Role

Tom Richards, Eskimo bush pilot, was signed on location to play a screen role in "Arctic Flight," new adventure drama starring Wayne Morris, now at the ..... theatre.

Much of the Monogram picture was made on Little Diomede Island, in the Bering Strait, and at Kotzebue, Alaska. Richards operates out of Kotzebue, and his planes were used by the picture company during its Alaskan location stay.

Morris plays a pilot, victimized by a big game hunter, portrayed by Alan Hale, Jr., whose real reason for being in the Arctic country, when it is disclosed, sends the screenplay to a high climax.

Lola Albright has the feminine lead.

NATIVE

A native Eskimo, Tom Richards, a bush pilot in private life, has a featured role in "Arctic Flight," new Wayne Morris starring picture, now at the ..... theatre. Much of the Monogram picture was filmed on the Alaskan coast. Lindley Parsons produced the film in which Lola Albright and Alan Hale, Jr., are featured.

FRIGID

Much of Monogram's "Arctic Flight," Wayne Morris starring picture now at the ..... theatre, was filmed on Little Diomede Island, in the Bering Strait, and in the area around Kotzebue, Alaska.

VILLAIN

Alan Hale, Jr., plays the role of the villain, a big game hunter who tries to stab Wayne Morris, a bush pilot, in "Arctic Flight," new Monogram adventure picture now at the ..... theatre. Much of the picture was filmed in the ice and snows, north of the Arctic Circle. Lindsley Parsons produced the film.

'ARCTIC FLIGHT'
KEYS STORE TIEUPS

Stills from "ARCTIC FLIGHT" offer perfect background atmosphere for window displays of refrigerators, electric fans, cold beverages and numerous other kinds of merchandise. Merchants welcome such appropriate eye-catchers. Include in the display an "ARCTIC FLIGHT" poster bearing theatre name and playdate. Tieup line can be along these lines: ARCTIC BLASTS IN YOUR KITCHEN . . . ARCTIC THRILLS ON THE SCREEN! Stores which specialize in summer fur storage also will welcome a tieup embracing the polar scenes of "ARCTIC FLIGHT."

LET PUBLIC OGLE LOBBY IGLOO

A simulated Eskimo igloo can be made out of canvas, painted to resemble blocks of ice. Cover it with imitation snow (using ground rice, paper or mica). Your igloo will have a door, of course, and curious folks who look inside the igloo will see posters advertising "ARCTIC FLIGHT" coming to your theatre.

ICE-MELTING CONTEST PULLS

If you play the picture during the warmer months, use the sign-frozen-in-ice stunt, in front of theatre. Put a number of theatre passes in the cake of ice as well. People will gather around, hoping to be on hand when the ice melts and they can snatch the free ducats.

MAKE YOUR THEATRE FRONT MAKE YOU MONEY!

This is for the P. T. Barnums of modern day show business. The theatre manager who isn't satisfied unless a movie engagement produces a record boxoffice take will go for the relatively small expense necessary in building a false front. Cover up all your existing display frames with wallboard panels, boldly proclaiming the thrills and magnitude of "ARCTIC FLIGHT." Such poster paper as six-sheets, three-sheets, stills and window cards will give you much of the material needed. You can simulate massive ice blocks by use of paint. Frame your boxoffice with a cut-out igloo, and dress your cashier in Eskimo garb to further the illusion of the ice country. Icicle streamers blown by an electric fan or exhaust from your air-conditioning system, imitation snow, and dog sleds are other items which can contribute to your exploitation front.

WAYNE MORRIS 'JERIS' TIEUP

The popular 'JERIS' ad, illustrated here and featuring Wayne Morris star of "Arctic Flight" and giving the title a good plug, will be run in three nationally known magazines—Look Magazine, The Progressive Farmer and Farm and Ranch. Three fine media which will help bring extra customers to your theatre.

BAKED ALASKA - SHOWMAN'S STYLE

If you play "ARCTIC FLIGHT" during the cold months, paint a tin sign with copy on the picture, and freeze the sign in a block of ice. This sidewalk ballyhoo will catch the eye of every passerby. This stunt is workable in summer, too—with even greater attraction value—requiring merely a replacement of the ice cake for as long as you want to keep the bally.

Lobby "See" Board Sells Suspense

"ARCTIC FLIGHT" is an exploitation-type picture made to order for the sure-fire lobby "see" board. This is an easel board like the illustraton above on which you spot action stills from the movie and caption them with bold copy, each caption starting with the word "SEE . . . " Turn to ad pages in this press book for "see" lines to use on your lobby board.
